Freeze Thaw

Freeze-thaw is when water seeps into the stone through the pores, then when temperatures drop the water freezes and cracks the stone. The diagram below shows the process

Do not be alarmed, we would not try to sale you on a cheap product that is going to crack the first time it rains and freezes. What we want you to be aware of is that our stone has little to no chance of freeze thaw. Our stone has the highest compression strength in the industry, preventing water from seeping into the stone.
